LONG-RANGE WIRELESS BRIDGE SYSTEMS

Long-range wireless bridge systems are used to provide internet or network access between two or more buildings. The buildings can be 100 feet apart or up to 20 miles apart if there is a reasonable line of sight. A bridge is made by installing a specialized device at each building. These devices communicate wirelessly and make it possible to share network and/or internet access.

Long-range wireless bridge systems are commonly used for placing cameras (in conjunction with surveillance systems) in remote locations or sharing internet between buildings such as a detached garage or a friend or neighbor's home. These systems are also used for obtaining a better internet connection when providers do not serve a speed fast enough for your specific address. There are many other uses for bridge systems. Contact us to see if a long-range wireless bridge system is right for your needs.
